

Dr. Digkas Agis

Dr. Agis Digkas holds a PhD in geopolitical risk analysis and has extensive research activity on quantitative methods and decision support systems in geopolitics. He teaches energy geopolitics, quantitative risk analysis, and environmental policy at the University of Athens, the National Technical University of Athens, and the School of National Security of the Hellenic Police Academy, while he is the author of three books on the respective subjects. At the same time, he has work experience in the energy sector, especially in dealing with security and cooperation in the region of Eastern Europe and the Mediterranean, since he has served as Vice President of the Renewable Energy Sources Operator and a Visiting Professor of Environmental Policy at the National Technical University of Athens. In this regard, he was called to coordinate efforts and strengthen cooperation with states and businesses in the wider region.